TRUSSILIAN COURT, or, The Baronet's Son, BY MRS. HARRIET LEWIS.

CHAPTER I. A FATEFUL CATASTROPHE. A wild storm was raging upon the Mediterranean Sea, near the close of a dreary November day, and sky and waters were black with the gloom of the sudden and furious tempest.

These men were Englishmen, who had purchased passage on the Galia to Palermo, when they intended to embark by steamer to Marsa, the following day.

While the Captain and his assistants were attending to their duties, and expressing apprehensions as to their safety, the two Englishmen stood apart, leaning against the low railing, and surveying the wild sea around them.

These men were both young, apparently of the same age, about three and twenty, but evidently they were not of the same station in life.

One, the more striking of the two, was a young man, with a noble, full and manly face, with a frank, smiling mouth, a pair of blue eyes, and a white and ruddy complexion, and a young man, with a pale, thin, and somewhat nervous countenance, and a pair of dark eyes, and a somewhat nervous countenance.

His companion presented a respectable appearance to him, being also tall and slender, and with a full and manly face, and a pair of blue eyes, and a white and ruddy complexion, and a young man, with a pale, thin, and somewhat nervous countenance, and a pair of dark eyes, and a somewhat nervous countenance.
